The Interplay of Color and Movement

At the core of my artistic work lies the exploration of the spectrum of painterly expression on canvas and beyond. I investigate the interplay of light, reflections and dynamic movements – guided by the potential to capture transient moments in the pictorial image. Drawing on a deep-rooted cultural-philosophical tradition, I emphasize the significance of color as a primary theme in my creations.

Colors are Emotional

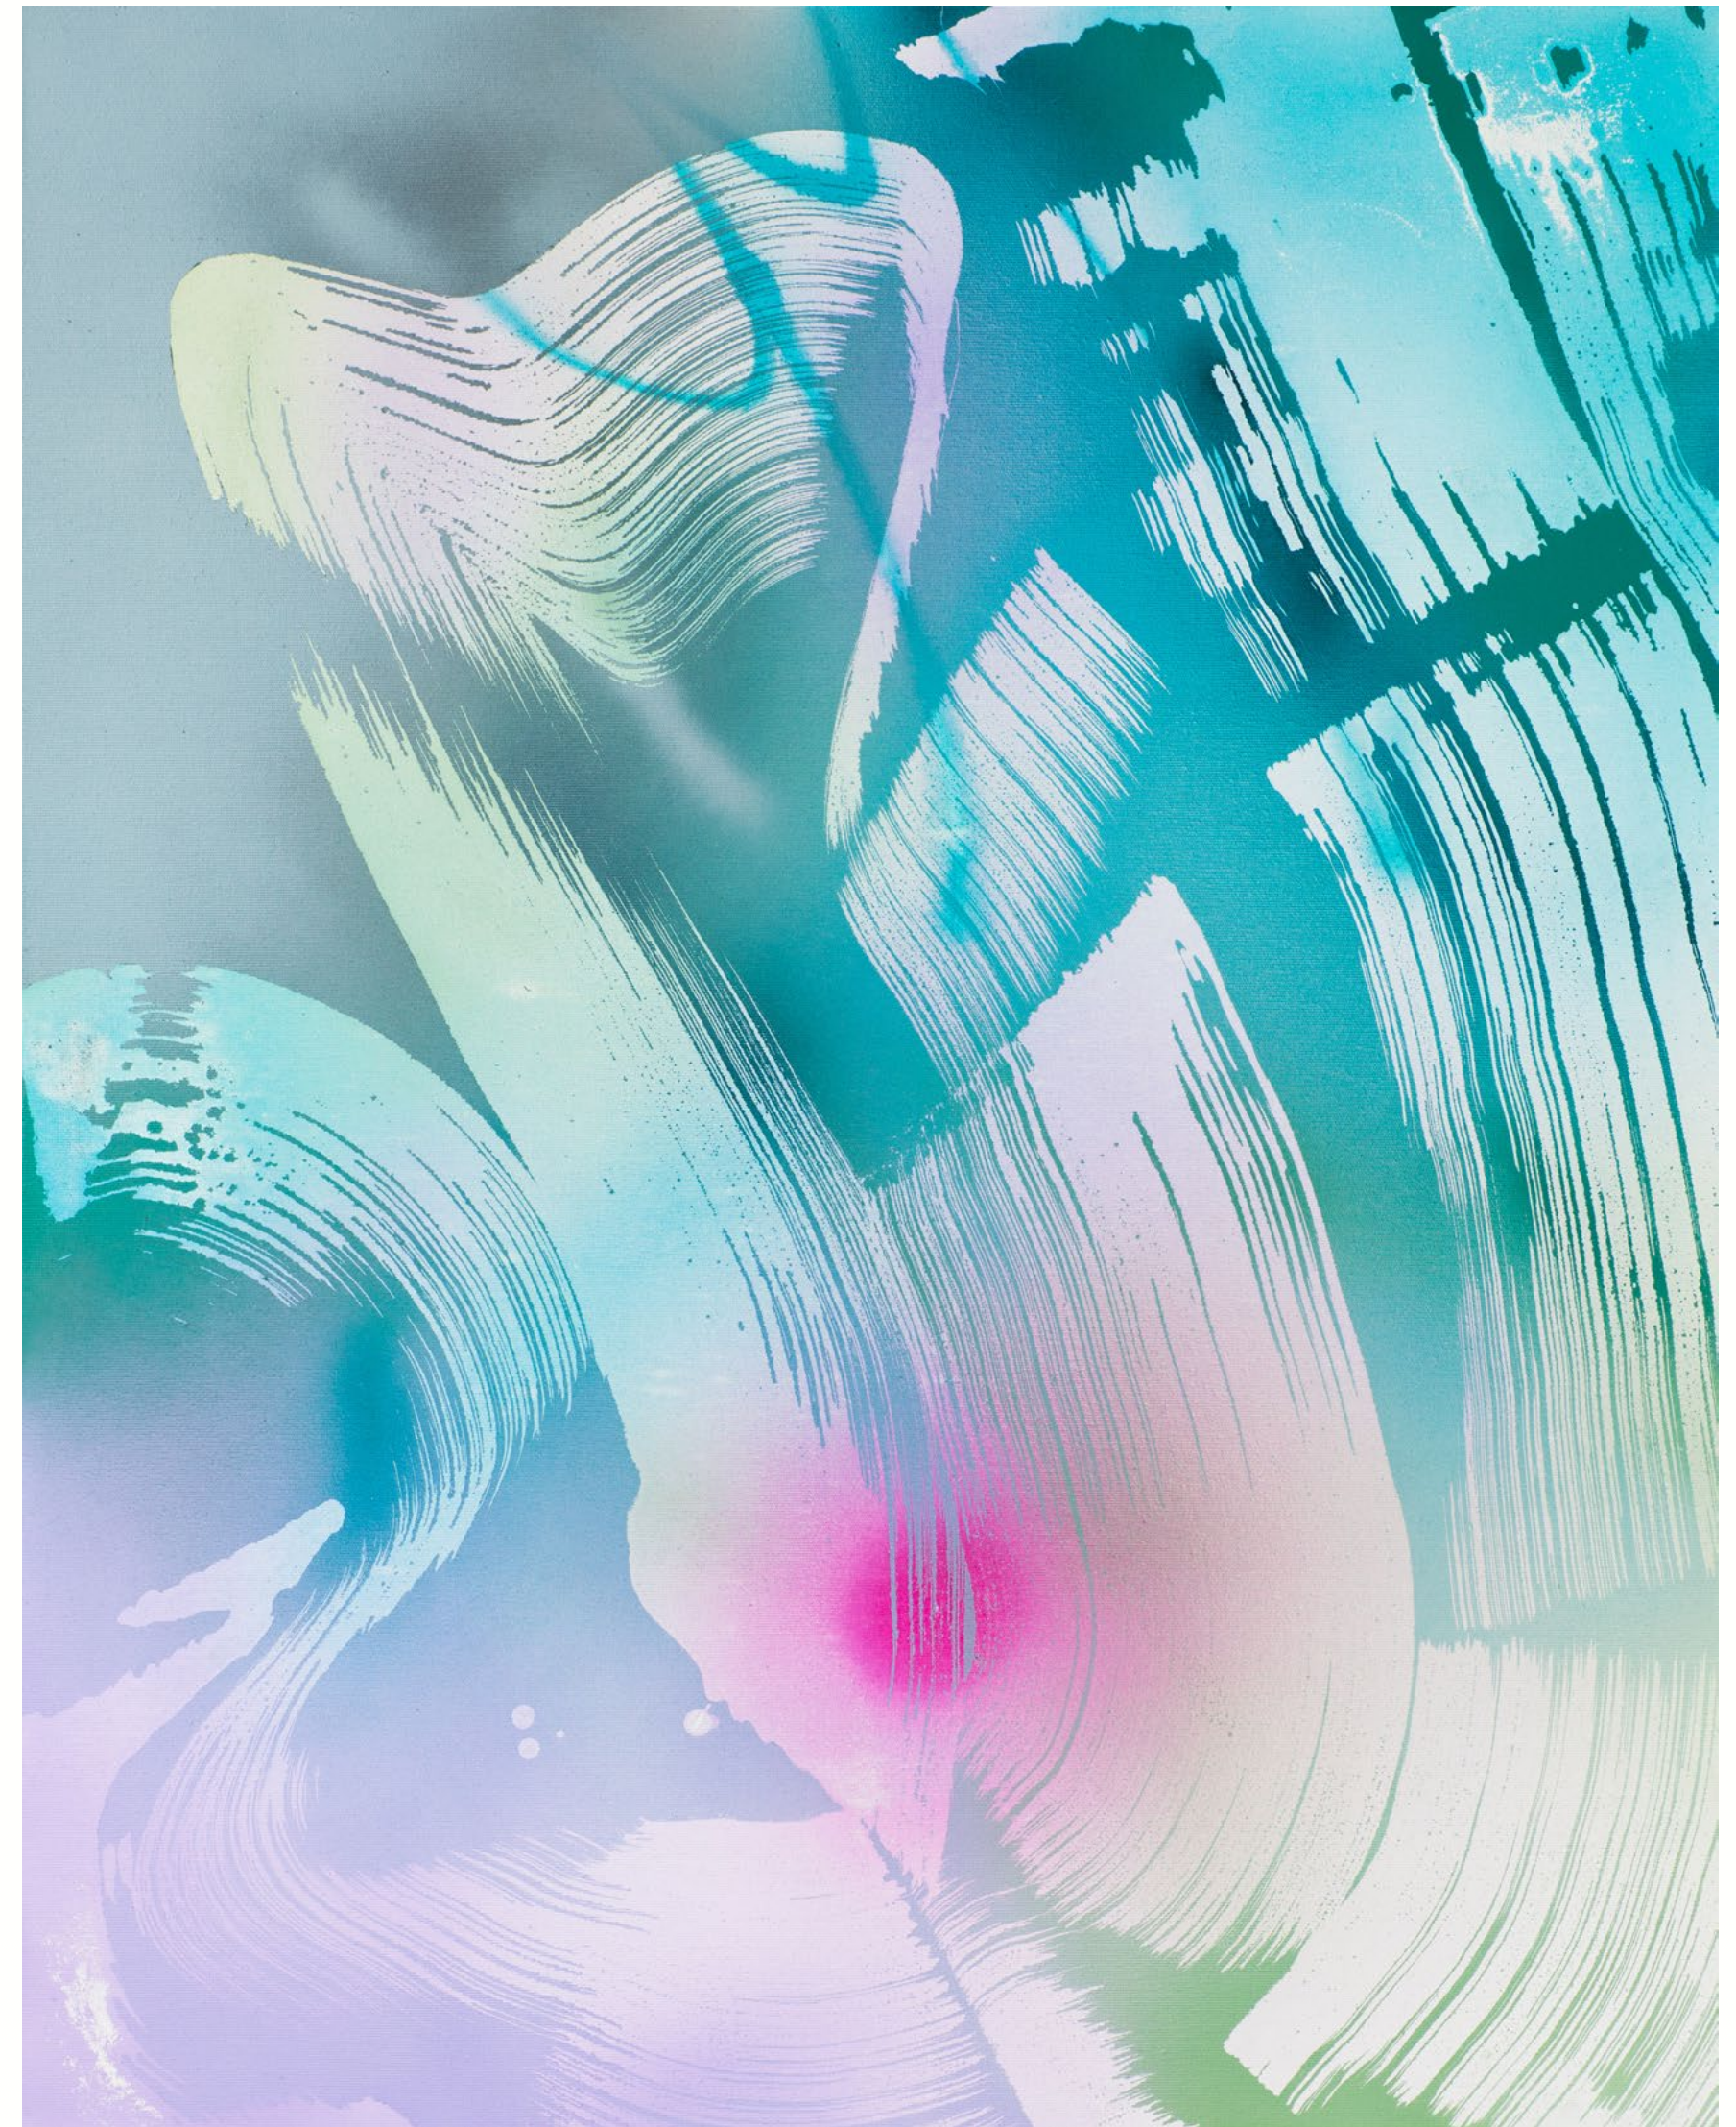

Color, in my artistic realm, serves as a powerful vehicle to evoke and convey emotions and reactions. The decisive use of color plays a central role in unfolding the narrative of my artworks and pushes the aesthetic boundaries of painting. This exploration goes beyond the conventional by engaging with the multidimensionality and the effects of the medium. In doing so, I strive to create a distinctive visual language that transcends the traditional limitations of canvas and the familiar.

Kinetic Colors

The works featured in the exhibition address the viewer in a unique way by inscribing the possibility of a transformative experience into the media. A special, iridescent material transforms the in itself static paintings into works of art whose appearance varies in relation to the light and viewing angle. Changing worlds of color characterize the visual impression. At the same time, the material reflects the surroundings and light back into the room in many different color shades. This creates a perpetually developing relationship between the recipient, their movement, the works and the surrounding.

The formal-aesthetic and thematic examination of topics such as light and shadow, light refraction and spectral colors as well as the search for a translation into painting open up new ways of expanding the expression of the medium without leaving the canvas.

Floating Spheres

This site-specific installation elevates color to an autonomous actor. Transparent, dichromatic panels in different geometric shapes move continuously and subtly due to the way they are suspended. In the interaction of light and material, the appearance of the installation changes both independently of the visitors and in interaction with them. The variety of colors and shapes transforms the space into a seemingly magical sphere that each recipient experiences individually.

Multi-Dimensionality of Painting

In my quest for artistic evolution, I strive to seamlessly blend classical and urban contemporary media to shape a distinctive body of work. My creative endeavors extend beyond traditional canvas paintings, encompassing site-specific installations and murals that serve as immersive canvases for a vivid mixture of artistic expressions.

This dynamic approach allows me to explore and integrate diverse mediums, pushing the boundaries of painting into a multidimensional approach of it, questioning its limits in my artistic exploration.
